A Tribute to Rohit Sharma

Rohit Sharma is perhaps the most evolved Indian batsman. For someone who started his career as a promising kid with lots of talent, who played some stellar knocks in Australia to win the ODI series back in 2008, who was drafted into Indian Test team and thereafter, who lost his way immeasurably, the sort of turnaround he has effected into becoming the captain of India, he has come a long way. This is a tribute to Rohit Sharma.

Rohit Sharma, the lazy elegance, the player with supreme touch and the ball races to the boundary. The bowler is not offended at all because he never felt the impact. Instead, he is also in awe looking at that shot. The murderous pull of anything pitched short is also treated by the bowler as something that is expected on the cricket field and he never responds with the same ferocity as is normal. Such is the impact of the shots that Rohit Sharma plays.

Rohit had a great series against South Africa at home but his real test was in Australia and in England. He didn't travel with the original team to Australia citing injury though he turned out for Mumbai Indians. Even I casted aspersions on his will to survive in test cricket. I had written that Rohit is afraid to travelling to Australia because he fears failure. He fears losing his test spot once and for all. He proved me wrong and though Rohit wasn't a grand success in Australia, he did contribute meaningful runs.

Created with ❤️ to honor a great Hitman - Rohit Sharma.
